Social interaction between wild-type and homozygous mice with attenuated receptor binding function of the APJ/CGRP/VPAC2 receptor. The endocrine cardiovascular system controls vital functions, such as blood pressure, heart rate, kidney function, and thyroid hormone production. In rodents, the receptor for the pituitary-derived hormone prolactin is critical to reproductive and endocrine functions. A VPAC2 receptor variant was generated by targeted mutagenesis in which a replacement of the conserved residue His383 with Phe markedly reduced the receptor's affinity to the ligand corticotropin-releasing hormone (CRH) and VIP. Male and female wild-type and homozygous mice, having the His383Phe mutation, as well as wild-type and homozygous females, respectively, were bred and mated. The corresponding pups were genotyped. The heterozygous offspring of both genders, displaying either the His383Phe or the wild-type receptor, were born
