Choice of homes, both old or new, around the world Living in Sweden When my wife and I decided to move to Sweden from New Zealand, one of the things we did think about was what it would be like to live in a cold climate. We knew it would be cold in the winter, but we weren't sure what it would be like for the rest of the year. What did we miss? We also wanted to know what we would miss about New Zealand. In the end, we decided to go for it and do our own research. Before we arrived, we read about homes in Sweden that we would like to have; both old and new, and places that we would like to avoid at all costs. This is what we found. Living in Sweden for some reason leads to many blog posts and articles about how to live in a small Swedish town. To be fair, many small Swedish towns are great places to live in. But what we want to show is that you don't have to live in a small town to live somewhere cold – which in fact, sometimes, is where you want to be. Some people might not want to live in a cold climate, and that is ok too. We are not telling people they have to live somewhere else, we are just showing that living in Sweden is not necessarily the end of the world and how you can still get a nice home, beautiful scenery and loads of culture. We have a good life here in Sweden. Sure, we miss many things about New Zealand, but we also see the value of the social services our government puts in place here. When we arrived, all the food in the shops was labelled in both Swedish and English. When we didn't know the names in Swedish, we just asked the shop assistants. We love the opportunities for learning languages that we have here. We love the country's community spirit – and the people are really nice. We also think it is important that Swedish has two official languages, Swedish and English, and that we have a large ethnic group from different countries – around 30% – who live here. It seems to us that the Swedish government is doing a good job when it comes to these issues. We do not want to see any move to bilingualism (Swedish and English), because that would lose one of the good things about Sweden. We do not think

A: A day spa is a service where you receive a relaxing and uplifting experience in a quiet, secluded environment. A day spa's clientele tend to be the higher income bracket and usually include children. A day spa is a full service event that includes massage, facial, manicure and pedicure services. A salon, on the other hand, offers a variety of services that are specific to the state of the hair and skin. Depending on the type of salon, a person may receive hair straightening, color, highlights, steam or deep conditioning treatments. Many salons also offer a full service experience including waxing, manicures, facials, and lash extensions. Q: What is the ideal age for someone to get their first facials? A: Most experts in the field agree that the ideal age for getting one's first facial is between the ages of eight to fifteen. Some doctors say it is better to get them at a young age because the skin is still developing at that point in time. You may, however, find that your child or teenager will prefer to wait until they turn older. Their skin will be better able to withstand the rigor of a chemical peel and when the acne has cleared. Q: What should I expect after getting a facial? A: When it is time for your facial, the facialist will begin by cleaning your skin using a gentle cleanser and then apply a mask
