More particularly, it relates to the release of railroad cars from a train at a rail yard to permit the cars to be conveyed to another train from a car stack. Presently, the release of railroad cars from a train at a rail yard to permit the cars to be conveyed to another train from a car stack is accomplished in many different ways. However, most methods require one or more railroad workers to lift a car by hand from the car stack, transfer the car to a hydraulic crane or other equipment and then lift the car from the crane and transfer it to the next train. Such an operation requires the use of
