Thank you! A: I fixed the problem, the link I was using to download the file was not accepting my download attempts, so I fixed it by opening a file with filezilla and download it directly from there. No problem. “Tim and I had been house hunting for a year when we met, and when we finally found the perfect house, we immediately knew we had to make an offer on it — and since we know exactly what it’s worth, we decided to make it our offer,” she said in an interview. “Not everyone is so lucky.” By paying more for a house, Sayama says she and her husband, Steve, create equity that would have been far more difficult to achieve otherwise. “We’re also more excited to sell because we can get more money than we would otherwise get if we didn’t buy the house,” she added. “With a home sale, we’re spending money and we get paid. That makes us happy.” Do these sellers know they’re really taking home more than they’d have gotten from renting? Of course not. At least, not always. “You have to have a certain amount of appreciation to sell at auction,” says Clarice Rogers, an auctioneer in Dallas who runs a private auction group. “You’re pricing the house according to how much you think it’s worth — if you were to buy it directly from the owner, you might be able to get more.” The advantage of an auction is that you may not have to pay any money down (in addition to the reduced cost of ownership). House prices have largely been stagnant for years, and Rogers says they probably won’t fall any further. “Those low levels of appreciation, coupled with the fact that home prices are now low — it just isn’t the best of times for the market,” she says. “You need to have that dollar amount.” Paying more than you’d have to rent isn’t a free ticket to wealth, especially if you’re buying in a place that’s already red-hot. “If you pay too much and the price goes up, you’re going to be very unhappy, and you’re 1cb139a0ed
