As I reflect on the past twelve months I can't help but be amazed at how the year went by. It certainly has been a roller coaster ride for me, but it has all been worth it. More often than not the highs, lows and twists and turns of life made the past year intense and in many ways never ending. Despite the sometimes overwhelming nature of the past year, I am thankful for the many great moments and experiences I have had. This past year has truly been one of the most enjoyable of my life. Thanksgiving flew by and I was just in time to close out my first calendar year of waiting. Today I check in to my second year of waiting. I started this crazy process of waiting almost 11 years ago. I am at a very different place in my life from where I was 11 years ago. I have changed a lot since then, but all of that is still very much a part of me. I had a difficult childhood, so although this blog exists I do not speak about my childhood in great detail. Nevertheless I will say that I never really thought of myself as a shy person, but yet the complexities of life and living in a small town in the Northern Michigan helped me develop into the person I am today. As my blog was taking off in such a great way I have had the chance to meet some incredible people. I would like to give a shout out to almost every reader of this blog. I appreciate each and every one of you that comes here. As weird as it seems I am actually kind of an introvert. I am thankful for all of the wonderful experiences that I have had in my life and all of the amazing people that I have met along the way. As this year is nearly over I feel like I am just now entering into the New Year. I feel like I have been living in the New Year my entire life. Where life has taken me is certainly a strange and scary place. Although it has not been 3da54e8ca3
