The signature made by paying for IT services or by using an online service in order to automate the creation and tracking of money transfers between individuals and businesses. These services are often offered by financial institutions that are willing to expand their services to a wider audience. Electronic money transfers (also known as e-money), however, are an essential part of the financial world and millions of international transactions are made every day. This type of transaction is especially relevant because it allows for the transfer of money without any risk of loss, fraud or delay and hence it is usually the best alternative to traditional money transfers. A personal account usually contains the money that will be transferred to another person. This transfer is known as the sending money and it is done directly from the seller to the recipient. In both cases, there are several rules and conditions to be followed in order to transfer money between individuals and companies.

Transferring money from a personal account to another one is usually done by a personal check, a money order or a wire transfer in the bank. Electronic money transfers can be used by individuals and companies to transfer money from one account to another both, manually and automatically.

Transferring money from one account to another can be done manually when you have an account on your computer or on an online site. On the contrary, it is usually done automatically when an account is linked to a bank, a payment center or other financial institution. For example, an automatic transaction can be done when you are paying for an online service. In addition, it could be achieved when you are paying with a credit card or by exchanging your cash for electronic currency. An online service is a web site that can be accessed with a computer or a mobile phone. They usually offer software, a secure connection, money transfer and help with the management of your accounts, bills and other financial operations. One of the best examples of online services is the MoneyGram. The company offers fast money transfers to individuals and businesses around the world, offers safe and easy ways to purchase or sell items online, and allows you to pay bills, order or make other types of purchases. Therefore, it is very important to choose a reputable site in
