The geomorphological features of Mount Everest and the extreme climatic conditions significantly enhance the generation and activity of pollutants, making it a potential medium of outdoor pollution. Mount Everest, which is located at 8,848 m above sea level, is also a major breeding ground for a variety of micro-organisms. The aim of this study was to identify the microbes present on the summit of Mount Everest (8,848 m) and to determine their types and quantification. Altogether, 1,000 samples were collected during the spring and autumn seasons. Biomass density of bacteria, viruses, fungi, and molds were analyzed using the cell densities and the colony-forming units (CFU) technique. The finding of the present study revealed that bacteria were the most dominant micro-organisms present on the summit of Mount Everest. The number of bacteria was the highest during the spring season (average of 10.7×10^8 CFU/ml). However, the average number of fungi was 5.33×10^8
