A space tetromino puzzle with beautiful, sweeping sound. About the Developer: There are plenty of experimental artists making work now. Just because I happen to be one of them, doesn't mean it's the right game to show off your skills. Hopefully this is the game you're looking for. Just like this: About the Developer: I'm a designer, composer, programmer and all around experimental artist, and I'm very good at being one. I've been working as a designer and programmer since '95, mostly in the games industry. My first commercial game was Grappleball, still one of the best games to ever exist. I made that in '98, and by '99 had moved on to other games including the Mario IP. Finally, uh, the game works for me! Except it doesn't save for some reason. It's really frustrating, and I'm sorry. Shouldn't work. I can't see anything. I can't play. There is a weird metallic hissing sound, like static, and when I try to play more than one note the notes slow down. At the same time, the UI on the GamePad freezes up, and I have to go over to my PC to play anything. This is due to my lack of acceptance of the fact that you are doing something really neat. Start by using the force and inertia from that last move to let you do the same motion but this time without any special effect. Then make 2 or 3 motion where you have to use the force and inertia to make some more movements so you get the effect. It's not the first thing I would recommend, but it's worked for me and it's a starting point for further exploration. I tend to try to make my source games in a way that players could easily play with friends and game developers. I've found that I can do this myself quite easily. I've found that it's pretty easy to figure out how to make a good source base when you just try to make a game as simple and straight forward as possible. Using 1 game as a source is quite easy. Just make the game and then slowly make modifications until you can't just use the

of the DIXIE (A sports and culture blog) Co-Main Event It was the early nineties and my brother Dean and I were in the seventh grade when he got his first professional wrestling ticket. We'd been living with my parents at the time and unfortunately my father had spent some time in the Betty Ford Clinic. So I ran to get Dean some "pro" tickets to his favourite sport and I actually ended up with the autograph. Years later, at a reunion, I confronted Dean for lots of embarrassing stuff we did together and he told me he had completely forgotten about this, but apparently he had met his hero, Roddy Piper. The match that took place on that Monday was between Hulk Hogan and Randy Savage. Also in the match were a few wrestlers that Dean and I were a big fan of at the time (there's a reason he got the tickets). It's a good thing Dean and I didn't get all the way. The match was shockingly good, despite the fact that Savage was on crutches. I was too young to appreciate it fully, but when the two men were in the middle of a wrestling battle Hogan would be able to break free of Savage, attack him while he was down, and play to the crowd. Even though Savage took enormous abuse, he never quit. The two men would wrestle for the next few minutes with Hogan throwing lots of awesome power bombs and Savage never once getting up to even make a token attempt to wrestled Hogan down. This maneuver to get Hogan away from Savage would be a well-known game of wrestlers of that time and would turn out to be crucial in the back-and-forth affair. Dean and I stayed for the whole thing, and we were sold. It was all so fast paced, so crazy and at times borderline stupid, but we loved it and at the time, we were totally into anything that was Fast and Outlandish. This was right before I got into the second phase of my oldest son's life. His name is now Sam and his two younger brothers, Spencer and Collin, are now fifteen and sixteen respectively, and this is my life stage in the history of my boys. Wrestling for Dean and myself was a part of the family, so when I found myself one day watching on ESPN, and fate would have it, the main event of the night was Randy Savage and Hulk Hogan. I suddenly found

Dodge Master combines two very popular mobile game genres; the action-shooter and the block-jumping genre. Dodge Master is a unique game of precision and reflexes. The game has 50 original hand-crafted levels, 2 unique gravity types, plus a whole bunch of crazy blocks, locks, keys, and special powers. And is it funny or what? Rules of the Game: You have to move quickly through the game, you'll get a lock, a key, and find a special power when you touch a special space. Everything happens quickly and you'll need to quickly dodge falling items and block incoming attacks before they can hit you. Every block you use will earn you reward points, and a multiplier will apply to your score. The game ends when all blocks are destroyed, or a two minute time limit is reached. Gravity Types: In Dodge Master you will see two different types of gravity. There is the normal gravity that blocks fall towards and there is a gravity that rotates the blocks. Every level will be randomly generated, which means that you could be going through the maze in the first level but the second level could be in a different direction! So you'll have to learn to dodge the falling stuff and rotate your blocks when you are hit by the rotating stuff. To make the levels more challenging there is also an alternate gravity in which the falling stuff rotates with the blocks. Bosses: The game features 30 secret bosses. These super block graphics will have you dodging upwards to avoid being hit by these blocks. Some bosses are more dangerous, some bosses can get multiple blocks at once and sometimes your blocks will be 'locked' to the boss. The bosses will also have a special item that you can collect. They will serve as a great weapon to help you defeat a level more easily. Additional to the main block game, there is a level editor on the app store. There you can create your own levels, record video demos of your levels, and even share your level creations with the other Dodge Master players. Since the original Dodge Master for iOS is very well received and is still being played by a lot of players on the app store, we decided that Dodge Master Android should be as equally successful and popular. Compilation "Action" is the first brick game that combines a great gameplay. You can choose between several characters, each with his own strengths and weaknesses. It is necessary to get the highest score in order to be the champion. Do you like
