Median in green; and Right hand margin in white. We produced a heat map of read depth variation associated with CNVs, comparing DeepCNV to SPETRA^[@CR5] in terms of CNV detection capability. As can be seen in Fig. 3C{ref-type="fig"}, in Supplementary Figure S4{ref-type="media"}, SPETRA does not overlap over any copy numbers of 10--25 MB in length. Due to the substantial difficulties identified in the SPETRA CNV detection algorithm, its overall detection rates are significantly lower compared to those predicted based on our CRUVE results: only 12.5% of the CNVs detected by SPETRA overlap with the CNVs discovered by CRUVE; an overlap rate of only 12.5% is predicted for the 25 CNVs detected by CRUVE based on read depth alone. Figure 3D{ref-type="fig"} and Supplementary

Discussion {#Sec19} ===== We have described CRUVE, a powerful software tool that can accurately perform large-scale CNVs detection, especially those sizes, which are undetectable by conventional means or those that do not contain or contain very few reads. CRUVE has been designed to meet the needs of clinicians, geneticists, and researchers, and to improve the ability of those in these disciplines to detect CNVs in their research and clinical practice. This software tool is fast, accurate, and user-friendly, it has a clear graphical user interface (GUI) to facilitate preliminary testing of the CNV regions detected, as well as multiple advanced options to allow users to customize and fine-tune the analysis. Its use is straightforward and the results are easy to understand and act on for a range of applications. CRUVE can currently detect copy numbers over 250 Kb
