The fact that Helmut Haber has admitted he might be right after all was surprising. Haber: "I am perhaps right. I would be happy if it's true" Sport Bild has the main details. Although there are no specifics on what Bayern might actually want to part with, the German news magazine reported that the rumors are true and that Bayern is trying to sell Ribery. Q: Why is a theme's base.html.twig generated if I'm not rendering it? I'm learning symfony 2.8. As you can see I'm rendering the base.html.twig inside of DefaultController.php (the homepage is defined in the...homepage?_ =2 route). How come my base.html.twig is being generated when I'm not rendering it? `/ * @Route("/", name="homepage") */ public function indexAction(Request $request) { $em = $this->getDoctrine()->getManager(); return $this->render('default/base.html.twig', ['page_title' => 'Default home page',]); }`

A: You are not rendering your template. Twig is nothing more than an engine to generate the rendered html. The base.html.twig is the template that will be rendered in the indexAction. Here's an example:

get('twig'); // 2. get the raw data (this is needed by the app/config/config.yml configuration).
$raw_data = $request->query->getRaw(); // 3. instantiate a new rendering context
$context = new \Twig_Environment($this->getParameter('kernel.environment')); // 4. render the template
$template = $twig->loadTemplate('base.html.twig'); $
