HTTP is a well known application protocol for exchanging data between a client and a server. HTTP is commonly used for electronic commerce, Web browsers, Web servers, document services and the like. The terms “HTTP,” “Web browser,” and “Web server” are used interchangeably throughout this document. A client and a server typically use HTTPS, which is a secured version of HTTP, to exchange data between them securely. When data are exchanged between a client and a server, the client and the server typically use a conventional Secure Socket Layer (SSL) handshake to establish an SSL connection between them. In an SSL handshake, the client and the server exchange various messages,
