What's new:

, A Scarcity Of Color Thang Coloring is one of the most artsy activities you can get into. I put you to work on a specific task, to share your talents with the world, as well as your thoughtful drawings. I've recently discovered, as I've gotten farther into my own creativity and find myself enjoying the things and people that bring out my artsy side, that self-expression is key for keeping your soul and mind in good condition. Cancer in my early 20s had hit for the first time in my entire life. As much as I didn't want to admit it at the time (it hit home) I accepted that I needed to take some time to spend more time reflecting on who I am as a person, and to find my voice. I had lost my direction in art for a while (yup, swore it was the best idea ever). I needed to let go of what I thought I was, and who I wanted to be. I needed to do something for myself to be happy and have a sense of achievement. After a month or so, I started again. Drawing what I want to see, what brings a smile to my face. This time, I'd also have to tackle the cards I hold dear and dealt me ... and that's when coloring came in. I needed to scream and yell and cry and hug a lot, and not just to cure myself of the soul-ache I know was just a diet of Tums in my stomach. If you'd like an easy-peasy way to practice gratitude and mind-mellowing, coloring is the right way to start. About My Coloring Game Mind-Mellowing: Making you feel wacky-duh; that you are worthy, human, and always putting your mark on the canvas Filling your life with healthy, artistic, and intellectual experiences Practicing art and taking care of yourself Helping you find yourself, and your own sense of achievement All while thanking you for doing all this: I am thankful to have met you; I appreciate your insights, and your candid emotions; I can ask for what I want; I have the ability to speak up. Here's how my brain works on this one: Self-worth: Catching people's attention with fine example and your behavior to do right communication systems are widely deployed to provide various types of communication content such as, for example, voice, data, and so on. Typical wireless communication systems may be multiple-access systems capable of supporting communication with multiple users by sharing available system resources (e.g., bandwidth, transmit power,...). Examples of such multiple-access systems may include code division multiple access (CDMA) systems, time division multiple access (TDMA) systems, frequency division multiple access (FDMA) systems, orthogonal frequency division multiple access (OFDMA) systems, and the like. Additionally, the wireless communication systems may be ad-hoc, peer-to-peer, or some combination of the foregoing. Generally, wireless multiple-access communication systems may concurrently communicate with multiple users using a multiple-access technique such as, for example, time division multiple access (TDMA), frequency division multiple access (FDMA), orthogonal frequency division multiple access (OFDMA), single-carrier frequency division multiple access (SC-FDMA), multi-carrier frequency division multiple access (MC-FDMA), and so on. Design of these wireless communication systems typically utilizes an access network having many relatively low power base stations (e.g., micro, pico, femto,...). The systems (e.g., of corresponding networks) utilizing low power base stations are commonly referred to as small cell networks, wireless local area networks (WLANs), or peer-to-peer networks.
