2. With the `_RGB__composite_` or `_combine files_` command in the top `_Windows_` panel, create a new file by clicking the folder icon to the left of the `_Image_` drop-down list and choosing either the `_New_` option (as shown in Figure 5-29) or the `_New document_` option. Click on OK and the new image will appear on the canvas. Figure 5-29 Selecting a new folder icon creates a new empty image. 3. In Figure 5-30, the New Image options are displayed on the top toolbar. The leftmost icon is the `_new image_` option and the rightmost icon is the `_New document_` icon, which creates a new blank image file. Figure 5-30 New Image options 4. Drag a file from the disk into the leftmost "New Image" icon. Using the same process shown in Step 2, create a new empty document. 5. Choose the appropriate `_New From_` command from the top toolbar. The three options are `_New from existing_`, `_New from Photo_`, and `_New from Template_`. The `_New from Existing_` option allows you to create a new, blank document based on an existing image. This is good for creating a copy of an existing image, as in Figure 5-31. The `_New from Photo_` and `_New from Template_` commands allow you to create a new document based on an existing image by using a `_mask_` as the template. Figure 5-31 Creating a new image based on an existing image 6. Choose `_New from Photo_` and select the existing image (called a `_mask_` in Photoshop) as your template from the following list: • `_Recent_` : Look for and choose the photo you want to use as your template. • `_Photo Album_` : Look for the selected photo in your photo album and select it. • `_Photo Library_` : Look for the selected photo in your current folder. 7. Q: What is the status of global language support in the GNOME desktop environment? In earlier versions of GNOME (I use 3.22.2), we could click on the "Accessibility" icon in the top-right corner and select "Show Applications that can use the current language". This would list everything installed, and allow us to select a language of our choice for those applications. In 3.22.2, this feature has been replaced by a "More Actions" menu which only has an "Ubuntu Language Support" entry. Clicking this opens a dialogue which does not list any applications by language. It just lists "Install Ubuntu Language Support" as an action. Why is this? Is it impossible to write an application that can read and write to the users preferred language (assuming that the user accepts the application's policies of course) and have it be able to use this option? A: Install Ubuntu Language Support Clicking on this link brings you to a dialogue that lists installed languages, including: C and C++ programming, Java programming, C# programming, Python programming, Qt programming, Ruby programming. Among the languages above Python is listed. Clicking on that brings up a dialogue for Ubuntu languages that includes Assamese language for India Azerbaijani language for Azerbaijan Basque language for Spain and France Bosnian language for Bosnia and Herzegovina Catalan language for Spain and France Chinese language for China Croatian language for Croatia Czech language for the Czech Republic Estonian language for Estonia Finnish language for Finland Galician language for Spain and France German language for Germany Greek language for Greece Hindi language for India Hungarian language for Hungary Icelandic language for Iceland Indonesian language for Indonesia Italian language for Italy Japanese language for Japan Korean language for Korea Luxembourgish language for Luxembourg Macedonian language for North Macedonia Norwegian language for Norway Portuguese language for Portugal Russian language for Russia Serbian language for Serbia Spanish language for Spain and France Swedish language for Sweden Thai language for Thailand Turkish language for Turkey Ukrainian language for Ukraine Welsh language for Wales Yiddish language for Germany as well as Vietnamese language for Vietnam

Local Where It All Went Wrong For the Freeway Related Tags: LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Tucked into a corner of Michigan's capital city, where the redbrick State Capitol building is dwarfed by the white spires of the Christian Science spire, is a large, white, bungalow-like building nestled on the corner of Newberry Street and Grand River Avenue. In the 1980s, this bungalow marked the start of a massive project that turned what was once a residential neighborhood into a bright, modern building that was considered the most modern of Lansing's governmental buildings, with a sleek, glass exterior, soaring ceilings and the state's Capitol building across the street. The project was intended as a showpiece of Michigan's nascent mass transportation effort. By 1989, full-length glass bollards, topped with white lights and lights at the ends, stretched from Newberry to Congress Street, and the building was one of only a handful of spaces in the city that had direct access to the bus stop at Newberry and Congress Street. By the early 1990s, the mass transit system in Lansing, which linked the state Capitol, the nearby Capital Area Transportation Authority (CATA) transit center and the bus stops for the Greyhound and Megabus bus lines, was the best in the state. But after years of use, it has fallen into disrepair. All-glass bollards, ripped from their concrete posts, now hang off the windowsills of what was once known as the Department of Transportation, and a giant sign that once lit up the facade at night warns visitors about the "Dangerous Building." It sits on the front lawn in front of what was a five-story underground garage. "It's the best glass I've seen," says Dr. Angela Hack, a retired physician and a member of the watchdog group Lansing-based Citizens Appointed Against Corruption (CAAC). "There's no glass left anywhere else in Lansing. It's so sad." The building's massive renovation is due to end at the end of the year, when the state leases the space to the Department of Health and Human Services. But as of August, a few lingering signs of problems remain. The glass bollards lining the corners of the building are barely hanging on their posts, one
