Bismarck's era A. Francesc Pallares Bismarck's era ART MARCÍ RACIÓ. There was an air of political uncertainty in Germany and Austria in 1878. The Franco-German War had not ended yet, but the victory of the Prussian army was widely considered as a challenge to French power in Europe. The two sovereign states had been engaged in a fierce arms race, mostly driven by the actions of Bismarck, the Prussian Chancellor. In his last years, Bismarck was determined to settle the dispute with France, though diplomatic relations between the two countries were frozen at this time. Political Stabilization in the Era of Bismarck The year 1878 was a decisive moment for both Germany and Austria. During the Franco-Prussian War, Prussia's superior military position allowed it to win the war in a matter of weeks, and Prussia's victory cast doubts on the stability of European monarchies. Additionally, the imposition of the 'Reichsmark' in 1871 provided financial stability to central Europe, but the monetary unification of Germany and Austria threatened to make a new war more likely. Therefore, the last years of King William I of Prussia coincided with an era of political consolidation. For instance, in 1877 the Union Act of Berlin was signed, uniting the two kingdoms in a federal state, and following this the Prussian army was strengthened with German volunteers. The Reinsurance Treaty (Burgfrieden) between the two countries was signed on January 31, 1878, confirming a treaty of peace between the two countries, and it was during this time that the unification of the two countries took place. In the French Empire, Emperor Napoleon III was forced to restore the constitution of 1848, and throughout 1873-1874 he faced a tumultuous 'Three Days of Paris'. Following the coup d'état of 1851, he had the coup of 2nd December 1852 which caused a political uncertainty in the Empire until the imperial power was reaffirmed. After the Second Empire fell in 1870, the monarchy was abolished in the French Empire and a Provisional Government of the French Republic was established in the 1871 Paris Commune. In 1875, 1877 and 1879, the Prussians invaded France. In 1871-1885, the Franco-Prussian War lasted, and it

The need for a digital tool like the Web to detect malicious content has become a reality and the professional community is beginning to recognize the value of the Web as a professional tool. This paper will not focus on the negative parts of the Web as another form of mass communications, but rather on those aspects that make it very useful and professional. Through this paper, we intend to emphasize the importance of the Web as a tool for modern democracy, at the same time proposing a comprehensive view of the current state of the Web, acknowledging its characteristics and the potential of this new information technology. The Web at the moment is an information mainstream, which is continuously growing and developing, the dynamic phenomenon that makes up the Web is the Internet, which has about 11 billion addresses and 25 million servers. And that means that everyday the Internet is expanding the number of users and pages and that will expand even more in the next years, as the Web is growing at a rate of 50% every year. The Internet is a worldwide network of information, created by the Internet Protocol (IP) with TCP/IP and it works by means of the Internet Transmission Control Protocol (TCP). TCP is responsible for: transmission and re-transmission of messages, establishment and disestablishment of connections, transmission of file and data and error checking. TCP is the communication control system of the Internet that guarantees the integrity, correctness and re-usability of each data packet. The Web is a reference "space" where all of the information related to humanity is located. It is a vast library, a dynamic library, the dynamic library, which is continuously being expanded and the impulse to which the Web responds is continual construction and expansion. This reference space is an Internet-based database that constantly is growing, evolving, containing, and integrating the various and fragmented form of information. and that is an information platform that was developed in the early 1990s with the assumption that every citizen will have his own computer. And we are moving towards that reality. In the last years, governments and public institutions have become aware of the computer as a medium which allows the development of projects with
