Ankazil is a first person/third person shooter hybrid space exploration game, with 3D isometric graphic view, and a sci-fi shooter gameplay based on resource management and PVE tactical missions. The Utrix was defeated after a long and harrowing journey across galaxies, but it is still not dead. It has somehow managed to awake, and now it needs to return home to satisfy its hunger for destruction. Flee from the monster's attacks and make every shot count as you take on this alien threat. Craft weapons to help you defeat this ancient beast. With a randomly generated Universe, unlockable characters and upgrades, no play through will be the same in this game. With such an awesome title you can be sure to see a lot of great data here. Our server is performing just fine and is here to stay as long as we keep going. We will do our best to improve and do everything we can to make sure our servers perform at their optimal level. We do apologize for this bug and the inconvenience it has caused but we are working towards its resolution. I think this should be removed. I did report the bug about 4 months ago and it was still there, its not only annoying, it's also deadly as it doesn't come in the form of a post, which others might read. What I think should be done is, change the title to [Tunnel Viper] or change it to [Imgur] or something else related to tunnelling, since in my opinion there isn't any tunnel related images on that page. Can you take a look at this? I only want to know where you would place the image? I had the image in my favorites like this: If you are logged in, go to the image and click on "My Favorites" and you will see the "Tunnel Viper" and "Tunnel Viper" in my list. If not, click on "Community" and then click on "My Favorites" to see it. This is a question of what could be improved. I would like to use HTML5, CSS3 and Javascript. I would like to use CSS because it helps my website look nicer and changes my page much more. Javascript

Solmec: Among Stars Game Description:

Solmec, the planet of a modest sun, is unfortunate to be located in the galaxy of a doomed star, but its grasslands are gentle for grazers and savannahs. The fecund planet offers green patches of grasslands, lakes and towering mountain ranges, between the hot, rocky deserts, making this world a beautiful place to visit. The plot of lands is enormous, and all can be grassland, savannah and forest lands, where you can find yourself wandering through the deserts, breaking through the forest or catching turtles on the savannah. As there is no end to the green on this planet, no greed for land can take hold on Solmec, which is why there is no war to be waged here!

The planets have terraformed the Scavenging Grazing lands into the lands of the Turtle grazing, Solmec's most efficient way of living. But there is one problem, that is the predators - the best way to survive is to herd the turtles. They provide their owners with the milk, they will eat the weeds, bring back the clean air to nourish the crops. Among the rich grasslands where the energetic grazers roam free, the predators can be found, in their role as protectors and controllers, which is where the Turtles and Stars come in.

While hunting enemy in the grasslands of Solmec, I saw a rather large turtle grazing in the meadow. As it was no fault of the turtler, the new wolf shadowed behind the turtle. I agreed with the commotion the predator made, the opener season has only just started, and both solmec am not the only place for hunting in this game. Just as I got into the process of opening the turtle, another fell saunter towards its common place. After watching the turtle react to the regrouping of the herd, I made the inclination that I would keep both the energy and the meat, and make the turtle my breakfast the next day!

What's new in Solmec: Among Stars:

Placed in the four corners of the world -- in Arabia, Gaska, Japan, and various points in Greece, Africa, and the Middle East -- the medieval citadels are scattered primarily in oases and loose sand hills that are reminders of the arid desert that once covered the lands of the Near East. Heavily defended, rarely visited except by tourists, and difficult to access, these cities and kingdoms were all the last bastions of civilization. Their most notable buildings mark significant achievements from the medieval period: a string of castles that form a long chain stretching for hundreds of miles across the land in a trail of protection; vast, multilayered walls; and a string of townhouses that encircle the centers of the respective citadels that serve as the primary economies of their respective regions. These places have long been significant archaeological sites and the subject of various kinds of studies about the development of civilization during the medieval period. However, In recent years they have also become a source of inspiration for new structures. PalmArches Every now and then a huge wall appears in a remotant corner of the world. Sometimes the cities tower above the desert walls in majestic testament to the power of the past; other times, huge spaces that echo the design of the wall are built, leaving a sense of grandeur and gazing into the hours ahead, like wandering down the "city of cemeteries". The large halls of the Citadels are reminiscent of the space of the imposing walls, and while they have often been forgotten or ignored, these spaces are slowly being transformed into something older and grander. The basis for the ultimate wall is a series of palm-tree arches. Placed alongside the citadel, in the desert between the town and the mountain, they appear to float effortlessly above the sand. An imperceptible link between the world of sand and stone, they become nothing more than a gateway into a solid construction -- a solid, sheltering, and welcoming wall. BasesThe bases of the palm-tree arches are formed by a series of interwoven trees called Boucharraa. Found throughout the Middle East, these traditional columns are rooted to the earth and their tops extend through the sky and can support up to 100 meters high. As the wind flows through the arches, the columns bend with it and essentially make the arches strong. PalmArches is located on the
