Here we are talking about the fact that someone did not realize (it was NOT actually him who did this). It seems to be not wrong in ordinary sentences, but in this sentence, we are talking about doing something mentally, so it seems to be out of context. Which is correct? Thanks for clarification A: It's not clear what you intended with this sentence, but it sounds awkward. It might have been grammatical in normal speech in another context. If you mean it's true, that the person didn't realize he was doing it, you can either say er wusste nicht, dass, or

There is no audio stream in any place that I can see. I'm guessing this is because this is a music video and the soundtrack is on a separate audio track. I want to get the song that is playing on the soundtrack track and make it the output. I am using the ffmpeg command below. This outputs a.wav file, and it does in fact output the audio I want. However, I want to specify the input instead of the output. How do I do that? Is that possible? ffmpeg -i input_url -i location.wav -filter_complex "scale=1280:-1" -t 400 out.wav A: Your input is located on your SD card, which is where you get the.wav file, but the original location of the audio is on a hard drive. If the SD card is not physically connected to the computer you will need to find its location (usually /media/sdb1 or similar). You can use the following command to redirect the output audio to your SD card ffmpeg -i input_url -i /location.wav -filter_complex "scale=1280:-1" -t 400 out.wav
