() This class has.Q: Weighing the same compounds by different methods Is it possible to weigh the same amounts of individual compounds by different methods, or is the method an influence? For example, can I weigh the same amount of alpha-pinene and eucalyptol by weighing in an evacuated vial, or by using a gas chromatograph? A: The result obtained by a gas chromatograph does not depend on the method used, but on the standard used. The method is an influence, but only if you use a slightly different protocol. Briefly, you could simulate a gas chromatographic analysis by using a GC equipped with a flame ionization detector (FID) and injecting a known amount of a standard, say benzene. References Guyer A.
