Introducing the new FOUR SERIES, to be all about the essential. FOUR SERIES 7" that delivers instant gratification, zero processing time. Q: Integration Testing in AngularJS based Websites I am new to angular js and we have a requirement where I am writing a simple angular app. My question is can I test my application using only javascript and there are no selenium. Or shall I stick to Mocking only the JavaScript and not the HTML? A: For small projects (development and testing/debugging) you don't have to separate anything. But as your project grows you will need to separate frontend (js) from backend (nodejs). That's where you will need to write tests for frontend specific pieces. Even though you're going to write tests in the same language as you're consuming it you still use different testing frameworks. And because you're going to have your tests in the same language (JavaScript) you don't have to do any mocking. For example if your app is built with angular and you're writing tests with Jest you will have something like this in your package.json. "scripts": { "test": "jest" } and later, when you run npm run test it will go for jest and run all the unit/integration tests. In angular2+ you will need to specify the testing options (TypeScript) for the test so that you can have something like this in your package.json "jest": { "options": { "tsconfig": "tsconfig.spec.json" } } Also, for big projects you need to test at least all of your business logic. That's where you will use things like mocks, injectable classes, factories, service calls etc. You will need to write tests for everything that can fail in a frontend app. I wrote a tutorial how to write tests for Angular. If you're using Angular + Jest you will have something like this in your Jest configuration. "jest": { "testEnvironment": "node", "globals": { "ts": false }, "transform": { "^+\\.+(ts|html|css)$
