Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an image reading device, in particular, the present invention relates to an image reading device that detects light distribution of a camera lens. 2. Description of the Related Art An image reading device that is mounted on a camera is known. The image reading device irradiates light to a subject and receives light that is reflected by the subject. The received light is converted into an electrical signal, and this electrical signal is processed. The subject includes an image and a barcode, which is a symbol of a number. If a large number of subjects are present in a subject image, then a barcode reader is used to read an image barcode, which is a symbol of a number. This is a reading method that reads an image barcode from the subject image. This reading method allows an image to be easily obtained without detecting a barcode from the subject image. However, if the barcode is not properly aligned in the subject image, then it is difficult to read a barcode from the subject image. The quality of a barcode can be improved if the barcode is properly aligned in the subject image. To read an image barcode, a camera lens is moved, in which light is irradiated, so that the irradiated light is incident at a particular point on a subject. If the subject is not at a particular point in the subject image, then the image barcode cannot be read. If the camera lens is moved to a particular point on the subject image that is a correct position to read the image barcode, then the quality of the image barcode can be improved. However, if the camera lens is deviated
