New Brunswick has come into the public eye lately over allegations that Amber Rudd's sister stole cocaine from a police evidence room and sold it on the street. It's a mess - and a testament to just how bad our public safety infrastructure is. But moving on to the euro-bashing victim-blaming strategy being employed by Tories and other parties in Britain - perhaps it should have been no surprise to see a similar trend begin to appear in Germany. Firstly, the Tory government has made the problem worse by cutting services to the elderly (Gestationspenden), and cut funding for the NHS (Sterbehilfe) for families who didn't have children. Then Tory Minister James Brokenshire was pointedly shown the door from the cabinet post after becoming the first minister 6d1f23a050
