The same day he posted his verdict, Mr Justice Arnold issued a £1,250 () (£1,242; £2,604) fine and £665 () (£715; £1,076) costs. On Tuesday, after the jury heard evidence from representatives of all the witnesses, he returned a not guilty verdict. The jury of eight women and four men had deliberated for three days. The case was heard at the High Court's Bristol Crown Court. Mr Singh, 29, was arrested by immigration officials after he and other passengers boarded a Dutch Railways Eurostar service from London in August 2009. The three-month trial heard that the two Muslims had had legitimate reasons for wanting to leave Britain. But the prosecution said both had smuggled themselves into the country in an effort to "use our services to live a life of luxury". On arrival at St Pancras, Mr Singh showed a boarding pass for a business class flight to Amsterdam. But he had overstayed his visa by 24 days, well in excess of the 14 days he had been granted by UK authorities. Investigating officer Inspector Rupert Milner said the 29-year-old Indian national was "highly credible" and that he had been "very aggressive" on the day of his arrest. He added: "It is clear that Mr Singh's conduct was deliberate as he openly admitted he was carrying the electronic chip which allowed him to leave the UK." "The public should not have to put up with conduct like this when travelling on UK trains and stations. The safety of the people travelling on our railways is paramount." In evidence Mr Singh said that he had been applying for a job in the UK when he had decided to travel to London on the Eurostar. While passengers in most UK coach and rail services must pay a £5 fee to buy a valid ticket, passengers on the Eurostar are given a ticket valid in all other European countries and can use all services on the network. Mr Singh told the court that he and the two Muslims were travelling together on the train to meet members of his family in London. The prosecution said that Mr Singh's claim that he was going to spend three days with his family was not true. Mr Singh had spent four nights in Euston Hotel, according to the court papers. Passing sentence, Mr Justice Arnold said Mr Singh's actions were "inherently selfish". "This case concerns you, in particular, because I believe that it f988f36e3a
