Such a filling device is described in German Laid-Open (DOS) No. 2,921,949. A filling device is provided with a feed screw for the viscous filling material, however, the linear movement of the feed screw in the feed position takes place against the force of a spring. As a consequence, when the feed screw is stopped, it is inclined against the force of the spring in the direction of the shaft. The feed screw is supported at the upper and the lower end thereof in a manner enabling the shaft to rotate. The rotating support is provided with two angular profiles which can be moved relative to one another to an angle corresponding to the position of the shaft. The angular profiles are arranged at a distance from one another along the direction of movement of the shaft and form between them an acute angle. Thus, in the operation of the device, the angular profiles are first of all moved outwards to a position corresponding to the top dead center position of the feed screw. A viscous filling material is fed into the device in the direction of the feed screw. During the following part of the feed, the angular profiles are moved to the position in which the acute angle made by the profiles corresponds to the bottom dead center
