It consisted of gold ornaments, gold plate, gold ear-plates and a gold box, with a great number of gold spoons, as well as a large quantity of gold adornments for the bodies of the dead and the dead themselves. The story of the city of Quilco may be compared to the fable of the two shepherds. The first, who dwelt at Quilco, met the second shepherd, who dwelt at Sondaga, and showed him the city of Quilco, inhabited by many people. The second shepherd said, "Make it grow," and departed. On the following night the first shepherd came back and said, "This city was turned into a wilderness." The second shepherd was astonished at this but made no remark. During the night the first shepherd again came back and said, "Turn it back into a city, and make the wilderness produce people, for now the people of Quilco are few." The second shepherd accepted this statement, and departed.
